DLG confirms ongoing quality performance”

“Prize for long-term product quality” goes to Zott for the 28th time

The food testing center of the Deutschen Landwirtschafts-Gesellschaft (DLG - German Agricultural Society) honored Zott, the gourmet dairy from Mertingen, with the “Prize for long-term product quality” for the 28th time. The award is given for the consistent, targeted focus of the company and its employees on quality. “All of us at Zott are very proud of this award, since it serves as evidence to the public for the awareness we have for product quality and safety in our everyday work. Once again, our employees have fulfilled the high standards of neutral DLG experts thanks to their professional expertise, their commitment, and their strong passion for our products along the entire production chain” explains Thomas Müller, Head of Production and Technology at Zott in the Yogurt and Dessert area.

For a company to receive this unique award, it must take part in international quality testing at the DLG food testing center for five years in a row, achieving at least three awards in each award year. The “Prize for long-term product quality” is awarded only after the fifth successful year of participation.

All of the companies that received the honor are published at www.DLG.org/PLP.
